BARRIERS KEEP YOUNG PEOPLE FROM PARTICIPATING

BARRIERS

- Hard to discover
- Cost and transport
- Attending alone
- Perceived safety
- Limited activity choice

→

POTENTIAL EFFECT

Lower participation in supervised activities.

↓

More unstructured time without trusted adults

THEORETICAL RISK

Greater exposure to disengagement and risky situations

TWO THEORIES EXPLAIN WHY SUPERVISION AND BELONGING MATTER

Routine Activity Theory

Social settings and the absence of capable guardians can shape opportunities for offending.

Design implication:

Approved sessions with trusted adult hosts.

Cohen & Felson (1979);
Osgood et al. (1996)

Social Bond Theory

Attachment, involvement and social connections can strengthen bonds with conventional society.

Design implication:

Peer belonging, regular participation and youth leadership.

- Report aggregate engagement

The biggest alternative may be not participating at all.
